ABSTRACT

The National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities conducted a study of the openings, closings, mergers, and accreditation status of independent institutions in the United States from Spring 1970 through Fall 1976. Information was gathered primarily from annual editions of the "Education Directory" and "Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education," with verifications through contact with state associations, accrediting agencies, and institutions themselves. Results showed that during this period: (1) 46 independent colleges and branch campuses were founded; (2) 113 colleges and branch campuses closed; (3) in addition to closings, 39 colleges and branch campuses merged with other institutions; (4) 15 colleges shifted to public control; (5) 262 institutions attained accreditation status from nationally recognized agencies; and (6) no institution other than those closed lost accreditation. For each institution concerned, this information is given: the year the college was entered in the "Education Directory," the year founded, institution type (two-year, four-year, or specialized); accreditation status, headcount enrollment; single-sex or coed type; and organizational or religious affiliation. ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This report is a study of openings, closings, mergers and accreditation status of independent colleges and universities from Spring 1970 through Fall 1976. The purpose of this report is to provide accurate information about the status of independent institutions.

The study utilized data compiled in the annual publication of the Education Directory, prepared by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education, prepared by the Council on Postsecondary Accreditation. Every effort was made to verify information contained in this study through contact with state associations of independent colleges and universities, national accrediting agencies, and individual institutions.

This study could not have been completed without the cooperation of various associations, agencies, and institutions, nor without the assistance of Michael Schwartz and Julianne Still Thrift, research assistants, in addition to other support staff at NAICU who typed several drafts. However, the full responsibility for the accuracy of this report rests with the author.

OPENINGS, CLOSINGS, MERGERS AND ACCREDITATION STATUS OF INDEPENDENT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES, SPRING 1970 - FALL 1976

In its concern to monitor the health and vitality of the independent sector, the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities (NAICU) conducted a study of the openings, closings, mergers and accreditation status of independent colleges and universities from Spring 1970 through Fall 1976. The information was derived primarily from the annual publications of the Education Directory and Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education. Every effort was made to verify the data contained in this study through direct contact with state associations of independent colleges and universities, nationally recognized accrediting agencies, and individual institutions.

Highlights of the Study

--From Spring 1970 through Fall 1976, a total of 46 independent colleges and branch campuses were founded: seven two-year colleges, 23 four-year colleges, and 16 specialized institutions.

--During this period 113 independent colleges and branch campuses closed: 37 two-year colleges, 39 four-year colleges, and 37 specialized institutions.

--In addition to the closings during this period, 39 independent colleges and branch campuses merged with other independent institutions: six two-year colleges, 23 four-year colleges, and 10 specialized institutions.

--Furthermore, 15 independent colleges shifted to public control: six two-year colleges, five four-year colleges, and four specialized institutions.

--From Spring 1970 through Fall 1976, 262 independent institutions and branch campuses attained accredited status from nationally recognized accrediting agencies: 49 two-year colleges, 132 four-year colleges, and 81 specialized institutions.

--From Spring 1970 through Fall 1976, other than those institutions which closed, no independent institution lost accreditation.

Methods Summary

The basic source for this study was the Education Directory which is published annually by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The three criteria used for inclusion in the Education Directory are: (1) accreditation by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or state department of education, (2) preaccreditation status by one of these agencies, or (3) acceptance of an institution's credits as though coming from an accredited institution by at least three accredited institutions. There are many colleges in existence who do not met these criteria, but they are not included in the study. Some information on colleges openings, closings, and mergers has been verified through contact with the state associations of independent colleges and with institutions.

The criteria used for determining accreditation status was accreditation by national accrediting agencies recognized by the Council on Postsecondary Education.[1] The primary source for verifying accreditation status was Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education 1977-78.[2] Some information was verfied through direct contact with institutions and recognized accrediting agencies, particularly in cases where institutions have recently attained preaccredited status.

The purpose of this study is to present accurate information on the openings, closings, mergers and accreditation status of independent colleges and universities from Spring 1970 through Fall 1976. However, there is no attempt to analyze why colleges have opened, closed or merged.

Institutions are classified as two-year, four-year or specialized institutions.[3] Information is given about enrollment, founding dates, accreditation status, and affiliation.

[2]Council on Postsecondary Accreditation, Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education 1977-78, ed. by Sherry S. Harris (Washington, D.C.: American Council on Education), 1977.

[3]In addition to other specialized institutions, this category includes single purpose institutions, some of which are "closed enrollment" institutions; that is, schools only open to seminarians or religious women which are used for training students for religious orders.

FIRST TIME OPENINGS

There were 46 independent colleges and branch campuses founded between 1970 and 1976 that met the criteria[4] for inclusion in the Education Directory. We have no reliable data on the number of colleges founded that have not met these criteria. Of these, seven (15%) were two-year colleges, 23 (50%) were four-year colleges, and 16 (35%) were specialized institutions.

Out of the 46 institutions, seven (15%) were church-related and 39 (85%) were non-sectarian. Of these schools, 29 (63%) had enrollments under 250 students, eight (17%) had enrollments under 500 students, four (9%) had enrollments between 500 and 1,000 students, and five (11%) had enrollments over 1,000 students as of Fall 1976. Two institutions were single-sex and 44 were co-educational.

CLOSINGS

From Spring 1970 to Fall 1976, 113 independent institutions closed. Of these, 37 (33%) were two-year colleges, 39 (34%) were four-year colleges, and 37 (33%) were specialized institutions. Of the 37 specialized institutions, 32 (86%) were "closed enrollment" institutions, i.e., they were seminaries or religious schools for women and men that served primarily as formation houses. Two of these closings were branch campuses.

Out of 113 institutions, 63 (56%) were church-related, although 32 of these were "special purpose" religious schools, and 50 (44%) were non-sectarian. Of these institutions which closed, 69 (61%) had enrollments of under 250 students, 28 (25%) had under 500 students, 12 (11%) had enrollments from 500 to 1,000 students, and three (approximately 3%) had enrollments of over 1,000 students at the date of their closings. Enrollment data was not available for one institution. Sixty-six (58%) of these institutions were co-educational and 47 (42%) were single-sex institutions.

MERGERS WITH INDEPENDENT AND STATE-SUPPORTED INSTITUTIONS

During this period 39 independent institutions and branch campuses merged with other independent institutions: six (15%) were two-year colleges; 23 (59%) were four-year colleges; and 10 (26%) were specialized institutions. Of these institutions, 26 (67%) were church-related, and 13 (33%) were non-sectarian.

[4]See Appendix I: Criteria for Listing in the Education Directory.

At the year of their mergers, 13 (33%) of these institutions had enrollments of under 250 students, 13 (33%) had enrollments of under 500 students, seven (18%) had enrollments of 500 to 1,000 students, and six (16%) had enrollments of over 1,000 students. Twenty-nine (74%) of these institutions were co-educational; seven (18%) were single-sex, and three (8%) were coordinate at the year of their merger.

From Spring 1970 through Fall 1976, 15 institutions shifted to public control: six (40%) two-year colleges; five (33%) four-year colleges; and four (27%) specialized institutions. Of this group, one was church-related and 14 were non-sectarian. At the year of their shift to public control, four (27%) had enrollments of under 250 students, four (27%) had enrollments of under 500 students, five (33%) had enrollments of 500 to 1,000 students, and two (13%) had enrollments of over 1,000 students. All fifteen institutions (100%) were co-educational at the year when the shift occurred.

ACCREDITATION STATUS

From Spring 1970 through Fall 1976, 262 institutions and branch campuses attained accreditation or candidacy for accreditation status and thus were included in the Education Directory. These colleges, therefore, were counted as part of the total number of higher education institutions in the country, although their founding dates in most cases precede 1970. Of these, 49 (19%) were two-year colleges, 132 (50%) were four-year colleges, and 81 (31%) were specialized institutions. Of these institutions, 116 (44%) were church-related and 146 (56%) were non-sectarian. The enrollment characteristics of these institutions as of Fall 1976 were: 99 (38%) had enrollments under 250 students; 63 (24%) had enrollments under 500 students; 52 (20%) had enrollments of 500 to 1,000 students; and 48 (18%) had enrollments of over 1,000 students. Twenty-six (10%) of these institutions were single-sex, 235 (90%) were co-educational, and one was a coordinate.

During this period, other than institutions which closed, no independent institution lost accreditation.
